

THE ASPIRATION OF SAMANTABHADRA

From the Northern Treasures' Mind of Penetrating Openness

CITTA ĀḤ. This extraordinary aspiration prayer, whereby samsaric sentient ones cannot help but become buddhas, was spoken by the Primal Buddha, Samantabhadra.

HOH! Everything of all that appears and exists—samsara and nirvana—is an illusory display of knowing or ignorance with one basis, two paths and two fruits. Through Samantabhadra's aspiration, may every one become buddha, manifestly complete in the palace of the dharmasphere.

The underlying basis is non-composite. It is an ineffable, self-arisen vast expanse named neither “samsara” nor “nirvana.” If just that is known, such is buddha; if not, such is a sentient one drifting through samsara. May every sentient one in the three realms know the ineffable fact, the basis.

I myself, Samantabhadra, innately know from its basis suchness—the basic fact void of cause or condition. It is not flawed by outward inflation or inward detraction, nor covered by the dark veil of unconsciousness. Hence, self-appearances have not been tainted by faults.

When reflexive rigpa abides in place, even if the three planes¹ came to ruin, there would be no panic or attachment to the five desirables. In self-arisen, thought-free consciousness, neither substantial forms nor the five poisons exist.

Rigpa's unencumbered clarity aspect has one essence with five wisdoms. From their maturation, the primal buddha's five families emerged. As the wisdoms further expanded, the forty-two buddhas arose. As the five wisdoms' dynamism dawned, the sixty blood drinkers emerged. Hence, basic rigpa never became confused. As I am the primal buddha, may sentient ones who travel the three realms recognize self-arisen rigpa through my aspiration. Thus, may great wisdom expand!

My emanations are ceaseless: I send forth inconceivable billions diversely manifest to tame whomever by whatever means. Through my compassionate aspiration, may all sentient ones who travel the three realms emerge from the six classes' abodes!

At first, since rigpa did not dawn upon the basis for confused sentient ones, there was oblivion conscious of nothing at all. Just that is ignorance—confusion's cause. Within that, having fallen senseless through blankness, a consciousness of panic started forth in a jumble. From that arose self, other and perceived enemies. Through the accretion of imprints, involvement in samsara came about by degrees. From that the afflictions—the five poisons—have increased. The five poisons' actions are without cease. Hence, as the basis of sentient ones' confusion is unconscious ignorance, through the aspiration of myself, the buddha, may every one of all the three realms' sentient beings perceive rigpa itself!

Co-emergent ignorance is a distracted, unaware consciousness. Thoroughly conceptualizing ignorance is to grasp at self and other as two. The two types of ignorance—co-emergent and thoroughly conceptualizing—are the basis of all sentient ones' confusion. Through the aspiration of myself, the buddha, may the enshrouding darkness of every samsaric being's unconsciousness be cleared away! May the consciousness that grasps at duality become lucid! May rigpa's own face be recognized!

The mind of dualistic grasping is doubt: from the arising of minute clinging, dense imprints have accrued by degrees. One is tormented by desires that crave the attractive: food, wealth, clothes, place, friends, the five desirables and loving kin. Such are worldly confusions. Endless and limitless are the actions of grasping [mind] and grasped-at [objects]. When the fruit of clinging ripens, having been born as a hungry ghost tormented by craving, one's hunger and thirst are appalling. Through the aspiration of myself, the buddha, lustful and clinging sentient ones should neither reject desirous yearning nor adopt lustful clinging. Causing rigpa to be held in its own place by releasing consciousness in the natural state, may all-discriminating wisdom be attained!

A subtle consciousness dreading appearances that are outer objects has started forth. Perceived enemies, gross striking and killing have arisen through the accretion of aversive imprints. When the fruit of aggression ripens, how miserable the hells' smelting and burning! Through the aspiration of myself, the buddha, when intense aggression has arisen in every sentient one [among] the six wayfarers, it should be released in the natural state, without rejecting or adopting it. Causing rigpa to be held in its own place, may luminosity wisdom be attained!

A mind that demeans and competes with others [has arisen] from an inflated attitude. Having developed a mind of built-up pride, one acts out the misery of conflict among self and others. When the fruit of such actions ripens, one is born as a god tasting transition and downfall. Through the aspiration of myself, the buddha, sentient ones in whom conceit has arisen should release consciousness in the natural state. Causing rigpa to be held in its own place, may the fact of equality be realized!

The painful actions of praising oneself and demeaning others [manifest] through imprints accrued by dualistic grasping. From the accretion of conflict and competition, one is born in the not-quite-gods' abode of carnage.² Its fruit will be to fall to hellish abodes. Through the aspiration of myself, the buddha, you in whom competition and conflict have arisen, release them in the natural state without perceiving enemies. Causing consciousness to be held in its own place, may there be the wisdom of unimpeded activity!

Through unconsciousness, apathy and distraction, through being dense, dull and forgetful, through laziness, delusion and falling senseless, [one will know] the fruit—to roam [as] an animal without protection. Through the aspiration of myself, the buddha, may the radiance of clear recollection dawn upon darkness sunk in delusion. Thus, may non-conceptual wisdom be attained!

Every sentient being whosoever in the three realms is equal to myself, the buddha—the underlying basis. [Yet that basis] has become the ground of confused unconsciousness. Now you pursue pointless actions. The six actions are like confused dreams.

I am the primal buddha. Through emanations I tame the six [types] of wayfarers. Thus, through Samantabhadra’s aspiration, may every sentient one without exception become buddha in the dharmasphere!

A HOH! Henceforth, when a realized yogin has planted this forceful aspiration in the state of unconfused, self-luminous rigpa, every one of all the sentient beings who hear this will manifestly become buddha within three lives.

If—at times of solar, lunar or planetary eclipses, earth claps and quakes, solstices or the changes of years—one will generate oneself as Samantabhadra and recite this in a place where all will hear, then every one of all the three realms’ sentient beings, becoming freed from ill-being by degrees, will at last attain buddhahood through the yogin’s aspiration. Thus it was spoken.

Extracted from the Great Completion Tantra that Reveals Samantabhadra’s Mind of Penetrating Openness, [this is] the nineteenth chapter, which has taught that every sentient one cannot help but become buddha through one’s having planted this great, forceful aspiration.

May it be virtuous!

This treasure text was revealed by Tertön Rigdzin Gödem (1337-c. 1409). At the request of Kyabjé Garchen Triptrül Rinpoché and with his clarifying commentary, this prayer of aspiration was translated into English by Ari-ma in 2011. In 2014 the original Tibetan text was extensively edited by Garchen Triptrül Rinpoché and retranslated on that basis. May its intent be fulfilled.

¹ That is, the three [planes] of existence [Tib. srid.pa.gsum]: the existences under, upon and above the earth.

² Garchen Rinpoche recalls in childhood having memorized this line as “bgo.rtsod.lha.min.gnas.su.skye,” which could be rendered as, “... one is born in the not-quite-gods’ abode of quarreling over the division [of resources].” However, he acknowledges not having found these words in any of the texts he has seen as an adult.
